Working on a research project for your psychology class? Explore these three useful psychology databases:

- PsycARTICLES - This database from the American Psychological Association has 26,000+ articles originally published in 42 peer-reviewed psychology journals between 1988 and the present. This database is recommended for scholarly, refereed, and peer reviewed articles.

- Psychology and Behavioral Sciences Collection taps into 500 full-text journals, most of which are peer-reviewed. Its coverage of child and adolescent psychology is particularly strong. Coverage of emotional and behavioral characteristics, psychiatry and psychology, mental processes, anthropology, and observational and experimental methods also is emphasized.

- EBSCOhost Psychology Databases - Search both the PsycARTICLES and the Psychology and Behavioral Science Collection databases simultaneously!

Getting started

Begin at is.gd/gcclib, a shortcut to lib.gccaz.edu/lmc. Click the Library Databases link next to the search box.

Locate the Psychology section in the Database Subjects list.

Interested in going further? Want to find even more online material? Search these databases, located in the General/All Subjects and General Reference categories at the top of the Databases by Subject page:

- Academic Search Premier - Articles cover many areas of academic study.

- JSTOR - Scholarly articles provide in-depth information. (Tip: Save time when you're reviewing your search results and choose the Article PDF view option.)

- Credo Reference - This is a collection of 600+ subject encyclopedias and specialized dictionaries that will introduce your topic. (Tip: Look at the word count for articles.)

How to cite database articles
